Up To Death At 80, Agent Sold Over $50 Million Of Insurance In 42 Years; Was Fine Violinist

Louis J. Fink, a leading life insurance agent, who sold more than $50,000,000 of insurance, died in New York Hospital. He was eighty years old and lived at 685 West End Avenue, New York; and in Hollywood Beach, Florida.

Mr. Fink was associated with the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company for his entire career of forty-two years in the insurance business. On a number of occasions he led the agents of the company in volume of sales, reports the New York Times. In 1940 he wrote one of the largest pension trust policies of the time, amounting to $4,000,000.

Mr. Fink, who was an accomplished amateur violinist and played a violin solo with the N.B.C. Symphony over a national hookup some years ago, said in a recent interview, .

"Selling life insurance is like playing good music on a fine instrument. Both stem from the heart. If the time ever comes that I lose interest in the lives and hopes of people, I'd no longer be able to write a large amount of insurance."

Last year he wrote over $500,000 of insurance. In 1959, 1960, 1961, at the ages of 74, 75 and 76, he wrote each year more than $1,000,000 of insurance.

In the first seven years after his 60th birthday, he wrote $18,000,000 of insurance. He was a life member of the Million Dollar Insurance Round Table, comprising agents who wrote more than $1,000,000 a year.

Up to his death he was still active in the business, and was associated with the David B. Fluegelman Agency, of Connecticut Mutual, at 342 Madison Avenue.

He was born in New York and attended City College and New York University. He began his business career in New York in 1905.

He served as treasurer of Max Rubel & Co.; merchandise manager of the Standard Mail Order Company; and general manager of the Times Square Auto Supply Company. He was said to have given up a $25,000-a-year job to enter the insurance field in 1923, because he wanted to be independent, says the New York Times. Mr. Fink was a golfer and had been a member of the Fairview Country Club.

Reform Judaism To Give 200,000 Children Course On Sex, Love, Marriage, Family, Divorce Problems

American Reform Judaism will introduce into the religious schools of its 661-member synagogues throughout the U.S. and Canada curriculum material, dealing with sexual behavior, family conflicts, and intermarriage.

Education leaders say the course is a "pioneering effort." They believe it to be the first time that such material will have been offered in any Jewish religious school, says the New York Times, and point out that only a few religious schools of other faiths are teaching courses on this subject as part of their official church curriculum.

Details of the project were outlined at the convention of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, influential Reform Jewish body, its 48th biennial general assembly, at the Fairmont Hotel, in San Francisco, Cal. Its affiliate, the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, met concurrently. Three thousand rabbinic and lay leaders attended.

Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler, the union's national director of education, said the course would relate the ethical and moral values of Judaism as they "bear on those perplexing questions, which our children daily pose." The course will be started in February and "will undoubtedly reach" the majority of the 200,000 youngsters who attend the Reform religious schols, he said.

Rabbi Schindler expressed the hope that the material would be utilized by children who attend the religious schools of the Orthodox and Conservative branches of Judaism.

The material to be made available in Reform religious schools is contained in a book by Rabbi Roland B. Gittelsohn, religious leader of Temple Israel in Boston, Mass., who is national chairman of Reform Judaism's Commission on Jewish Education. The book, entitled "Consecrated Unto Me — Jewish View of Love and Marriage," was published by the Union and will be available in book stores or at the organization's headquarters, the House of Living Judaism, 838 Fifth Avenue, New York 10021. It costs $3.95 plus tax.

In 14 chapters, Rabbi Gittelsohn confronts the problems of divorce, the nature of love — spiritual and physical — the family, contraception, premarital sexual behavior, and intermarriage, writes Irving Spiegel, in the New York Times. For his factual material, he draws upon biological and social studies, psychological data, and Jewish teaching.

On the subject of intermarriage, Rabbi Gittelsohn counsels the "most rigorous kind of investigation over a protracted period of time" before such a step is contemplated. "A marriage undertaken as a weapon to punish parents, or to strike back at an unkind fate," he says, "is almost certainly bound to fail."

In chapters on sex, Rabbi Gittelsohn concludes that Judaism "has always recognized that the sex life of human beings should be different from that of animals."

On the subject of teen-age dating behavior, the rabbi counsels "rigorous self-discipline." He insists that both sexes "must share responsibility for premarital sexual conduct."

In dealing with family conflicts, especially as they apply to the relationship of parents and children, Rabbi Gittelsohn emphasizes the need for "discipline tempered by tenderness."

"Mother and father must speak with one voice to their children, agreeing in their presence on all major family matters," he says.

A sampling of delegates found the majority in favor of the introduction of the course, Rabbi Schindler declared: "Our adolescents have the right to look to us for guidance. We should be prepared to help them find their way through the maze of eroticism which bewilders them to the true meaning of love for which they yearn, says the New York Times. The ethical ideals of Judaism can help them in this quest."

The National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods urged a liberalization of laws governing abortions and homosexuality.

Similar sections of a resolution before the Union of American Hebrew Congregations were referred to the male organization's Social Action Commission for study. They were not submitted to the delegates, a spokesman explained, because the resolutions had not been circulated in advance.

The actions by the affiliated Reform Jewish groups were taken at the conclusion of their biennial conventions, says the New York Times. The resolution adopted by the Sisterhood asserted that while Jewish tradition does not generally favor abortion "it does permit it under special circumstances."

Regarding homosexuality, the delegates agreed that "today enlightened men understand that homosexuality may be symptomatic of psychiatric disturbances which require sympathetic understanding and psychiatric evaluation."

Both groups backed birth control "for those who desire it" and urged a revision of divorce laws "so as to eliminate those practices which lead to collusion and which permit contempt for law."

Rabbinic and lay leaders of American Reform Judaism appealed to President Lyndon Johnson to call for an armistice in the Vietnam conflict so that negotiations for peace can be started immediately.

Amid a heated debate on this issue, which divided the 3,000 delegates attending the 48th general assembly of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the delegates overwhelmingly adopted a compromise resolution.

The original resolution had requested that the United States cease its bombing of North Vietnam "even were this to entail a short-range military disadvantage in order to contribute to an atmosphere conducive to negotiations and an ultimate cessation of carnage."

The compromise resolution first requested that President Johnson insure the well-being and the safety of the nation's armed forces and only then declare that "as of a given date our armed forces will cease firing, our planes will cease bombing."

The resolution added that on the date of the cessation of firing American representatives would proceed to a designated neutral place to meet with representatives of opposing forces, together with those from the United Nations, to find a "peaceful solution to the differences which have brought about this horrible conflict."

The compromise resolution also called on representatives of the opposing forces "to join us in this unselfish determination to demonstrate our commitment to peace in our time and for all time," reports the New York Times. The original statement, which also called for an immediate cessation of fighting and bombing as "an act of moral courage by the United States," had involved a long and animated debate on the convention floor.

A standing vote indicated an almost even division among the delegates on this original resolution. While the vote was being tallied, Representative Abraham Multer, Democrat of New York, who was a delegate from a Brooklyn synagogue, moved the substitute motion.

Earlier, Representative Multer asked for the defeat of the original resolution. He declared that the United States was engaged in a war that had been repeatedly approved by both houses of Congress, which had voted large appropriations for military needs in Vietnam.

Israel Lures Overseas Retailers With February Fashion Week

Israel is wooing United States retailers for its young ready-to-wear industry by an old, yet potent, merchandising technique — a fashion fair. The Government's Ministry of Commerce and Industry, in cooperation with the Israeli Fashion Center, will hold an Israel Fashion Week from February 21 to 26, 1966, says the New York Times, for buyers from department stores, the specialty stores and resident buying offices.

About sixty manufacturers of knitwear, rainwear, leather and suede coats and suits and other merchandise for men, women, and children will put their wares on display at Israel's largest hotel, the Tel-Aviv Hilton.

According to Amnon Shay, of the Ministry, who arrived in New York recently for a three-week, nationwide tour to stimulate American interest in the fashion week: "Our aim is to introduce our ready-to-wear to new places that didn't buy Israeli merchandise before.

Mr. Shay said in an interview that he expected about four hundred buyers from countries throughout the world to attend the showing of fall and winter fashions for 1966. "At least fifty per cent," he said, are expected to be from the United States.

The Israeli Government's desire to attract more American retailers to her shores is based on its program to increase its exports to America.

Israel's total apparel exports in 1964 totalled almost $14 million, of which thirty per cent was shipped to the United States, its biggest customer. Apparel, moreover, now accounts for some eight per cent of the Middle Eastern nation's total exports to the U.S. Any increase that can be made in exports of fashion merchandise would be a big boom to Israel's economy.

"Instead of Israel's apparel manufacturers going around the world," Mr. Shay declared, "we are bringing all the buyers to one place during our fashion week to see the new collections."

The first Israel Fashion Week was held early this year and attracted 200 buyers — more than one-quarter of whom were from the United States — who bought $2,000,000 worth of merchandise from fifty manufacturers.

Dr. A. A. Roback, formet Montrealer, who was a psychologist, educator, and author, died at his home in Cambridge, Mass., in his seventy-fifth year.

Dr. A. A. Roback, who seldom used the names Abraham Aron, was a specialist in folklore, psycholinguistics, ethnic, and systematic psychology, and mental tests, says the New York Times. A prolific writer, he had more than 1,700 published articles and other texts to his credit.

He graduated in 1912 from McGill University, where he received the Prince of Wales Medal for exceptional scholarship, an honor accorded to few students.

Dr. Roback received a doctorate in psychology at Harvard in 1917 and subsequently lectured on that subject at Harvard, the University of Pittsburgh, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Clark University. He also was professor of psychology at Northeastern and Emerson Universities in Boston.

He wrote "Psychology of Character," a well-used text, and other textbooks. In 1962 his "History of Psychology and Psychiatry" was published. It was full of pithy comments from Aristotle to the present day.

Another of Dr. Roback's works, "Freudiana," was published in 1957. It contained the texts of letters from Sigmund Freud, Havelock Ellis, Ivan Pavlov, Bernard Shaw, Romain Rolland, and others, said to have not been previously published.

Other works by Dr. Roback were: "History of American Psychology," "Behaviorism And Psychology," "Psychology of Common Sense"; and "Dictionary of International Slurs," says the New York Times. He was a contributor to several encyclopedias and compiled and edited two works dealing with Dr. Albert Schweitzer.

Dr. Roback leaves a daughter, Mrs. Miriam Lazrus; three grandchildren; and a sister, Mrs. Esther Kovshansky.

The ensuing twelve months will be devoted to intensive examination and discussion of the reports by the world commission in company with the territorial commissions. It is expected that by the summer of 1967 this phase will have been completed and recommendations will be made based on the findings. Dr. Judah Shapiro, here with Dr. Goldmann as global coordinator of the Commission for the Reorganization of the W.Z.O., termed the work of the territorial commission a growing recognition that each territory has special and different problems to which heed must be given and it is necessary to take into consideration the conditions in which Jews live in each territory. OVERSEAS RETAILERS

Mr. Shay said that he expected sales as a result of the next fashion week to amount to a minimum of three million. Among the different ready-to-wear categories, knitwear is Israel's leading product and accounts for 25 per cent of its apparel exports.

Dr. Max Leron, Consul and trade commissioner of Israel, in New York who will accompany Mr. Shay on his trip to eight cities in the United States, said that Israel hoped to break through in the United States market with medium-priced and high-priced fashions, says the New York Times. "We could never compete with Seventh Avenue manufacturers on less expensive merchandise," he added.

During the five days of the fashion fair, the participating manufacturers will join together to present two fashion shows emphasizing their best numbers.

All arrangements are being made by the Israel Fashion Center, a producer-organization working in conjunction with the Government.

REFORM JUDAISM

Other opponents of the original resolution had warned against appeasing aggressors, and had cited the intrigues of Communism in that part of the world. They said President Johnson's efforts would be weakened by the cessation of bombing.

On the other hand, Rabbi Roland B. Gittelsohn of Boston, a prominent leader of Reform Judaism, said there were risks involved in Reform Judaism's "speaking against our current war hysteria."

In calling for adoption of the original resolution, Rabbi Gittelsohn said:

"We must be prepared to answer to the jingoist nationalists of our nation as well as to the lunatic fringe of anti-Semites. But if we do not speak out now against war in Vietnam, we shall then have to answer to our tradition, to our collective conscience, and to God."

The Central Conference of American Rabbis, the rabbinic arm of American Judaism, has been on record for the cessation of bombing and a "vigorous pursuit" for peace negotiations and to "transfer our moral policing of the area to a multinational body."

The compromise resolution formed part of an over-all statement entitled "Judaism and a World at Peace," which was approved by the delegates. The statement included recommendations for a treaty against proliferation of nuclear weapons, for a new commitment to the United Nations, says the New York Times, for an extension of the nuclear treaty ban, and for pooling of fissionable material by all nuclear powers.

The marriage of Miss Sandra Schultz, daughter of Mrs. Barry Greenberg, 861 Stuart Avenue, to Bernard Murray Leibov, son of Mrs. Sara Leibov, 4400 Notre Dame Street, Chomedey, and the late Hyman Leibov, was solemnized at Anshei Ozeroff Synagogue, on Sunday, August 29, by Rabbi Harry Newmark, assisted by Cantor Herschel Stern. The bride was given in marriage by her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Malamud, 861 Stuart Avenue; and of Miami Beach, Florida. She wore a white, beaded, peau de soie gown, appliqued with lace; scoop neckline; and three-quarter-length sleeves; with full skirt and a long train. Her long veil of tulle illusion was topped by a flowered headpiece; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids. Miss Elaine Schultz was maid of honour for her sister. She wore a turquoise-blue gown, made with a beaded, lace bodice; and full chiffon skirt; also a blue hat; and carried white, and blue carnations. Teena Leibov, aged eleven years, sister of the groom, was an attendant. She wore a pink, peau de soie dress, trimmed with green beads; and a pink hair-bow; and carried a bouquet of white, and pink roses. Sheri Schultz, aged four years, niece of the bride; and Phyllis Melamed, aged six years, cousin of the bride; were flower girls. Sheri wore a pink, silk dress trimmed with velvet. Phyllis wore a pink, and white polka-dot silk dress. Each had a pink hair-bow; and carried a nosegay of pink, and white roses. Richard Rosenstein, brother-in-law of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Stephen Schultz, and Stanley Schultz, brothers of the bride; Irving Mark Leibov, and Howard Leibov, brothers of the groom; Norman Hollander, Martin Kerzner, cousins of the groom; Alfred Peeker, and David Appelbaum. White, and turquoise-blue carnations, pom-poms, and gladioli were the wedding flowers. There was an orchestra played. Two hundred and fifty guests were received. Mrs. Greenberg, mother of the bride, wore a sleeveless, turquoise-blue, beaded gown, made with a scoop neckline; and slim skirt; also a matching head-band. Mrs. Leibov, mother of the groom, wore a sleeveless, turquoise-blue, peau de soie gown which had a beaded bodice; and A-line skirt with a train adorned with beads; and had a beaded tiara. Mrs. Malamud, grandmother, who gave the bride in marriage, wore a turquoise-blue, beaded, sheath gown, cut with short sleeves; and a matching hat. Each had a wristlet of white orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Murray Leibov spent their wedding trip in Val D'Or, Quebec, the bride going away in a gold-coloured, silk ensemble; with a corsage of white orchids. LES JUIFS DE MONTREAL

Par Conrad Langlois, en La Patrie

MOTIFS DE FIERTE

N'est-ce pas d'abord grâce aux commandements donnés par Dieu à Moïse que nous distinguons ce qui est bon et ce qui est mal? De même, nous voyons dans l'Ancien Testament condamner toutes sortes d'actes mauvais: meurtres, sacrifices humains, vols, mensonges, adultères, pratiques sexuelles contre nature, oppression des pauvres, manquements à la parole donnée, etc. Sans la religion juive, notre morale eût été bien différente.

Ne devons-nous pas, aussi, aux Juifs, la croyance en un seul Dieu, l'idée de la création du monde, et même la Sainte Ecriture et la plupart de nos prières? Car même le Nouveau Testament n'a-t-il pas été écrit par des Juifs? Les Juifs ont fourni au monde le fondateur du christianisme, les premiers chrétiens, les premiers saints. Sans les Juifs, il n'y aurait pas eu de christianisme ni davantage de mahométisme.

On peut ajouter que ce sont également les Juifs qui nous ont donné les premiers préceptes de justice sociale, d'égalité, de liberté, de dignité humaine et même certains principes d'hygiène et d'économie politique.

Les Juifs ont exercé une assez grande influence philosophique. Maïmonides (1135-1204), presque un siècle avant saint Thomas d'Aquin (1225-1274), accomplit un immense effort pour mettre la philosophie d'Aristote au service de la religion.

Les Juifs ont apporté une contribution importante dans les lettres et les sciences. Au Moyen-Age surtout, grâce à leur érudition souvent remarquable, à leurs connaissances linguistiques étendues, à leurs nombreux contacts à la fois avec les Européens et avec les Arabes, ils ont puissamment contribué à la conservation et à la traduction en latin des auteurs grecs et latins et aussi des oeuvres produites par l'Islam.

Même les Juifs les moins religieux, les moins pratiquants, observent au moins les grandes fêtes juives, à la maison et à la synagogue. Les synagogues, où les Juifs s'assemblent pour ceux de leurs exercices religieux qu'ils ne font pas seulement à la maison, ont vu le jour au moment de la captivité de Babylone, il y a environ 2,500 ans, parce qu'ils n'avaient plus alors de temple.

Même après la reconstruction du Temple de Jérusalem, il y eut des synagogues, en plus du Temple. Il y en avait déjà des centaines au temps du Christ. Celui-ci y lisait parfois les Ecritures et y prêchait à l'occasion.

Depuis que les Juifs n'ont plus de temple, ils n'ont réellement plus de prêtres, puisqu'ils n'offrent plus de sacrifices. Les rabbins ne sont pas des prêtres, mais des docteurs de la loi, des théologiens, des prédicateurs, des conseillers. Dans la synagogue même, à part le rabbin, qui fait le sermon, le personnage habituellement le plus en évidence est le cantor ou maître chantre, car souvent les prières sont chantées ou psalmodiées.

ROSH HASHANAH

Les plus grandes fêtes des Juifs coïncident avec le début de leur année. Cette année (le 5,726e pour les Juifs), le Rosh Hashanah ("commencement de l'année" ou Premier de l'An) débutait le 26 septembre au coucher du soleil, et on l'observait aussi les 27 et 28 septembre. La date change chaque année, parce que le calendrier juif ne correspond pas au nôtre, mais l'année commence toujours en septembre ou au début d'octobre.

Il y a aussi le Yom Kippur ou jour du grand Pardon, qui commençait cette année le 5 octobre au coucher du soleil et qui finissait officiellement le 6 octobre, au son de la corne du bélier, après la cérémonie du soir. Cette série de fêtes se termine par celle des Tabernacles (Succoth), qui commençait cette année, le 10 octobre au soir pour se terminer le 19.

Ces fêtes existaient déjà avant l'exil de Babylone, mais elles acquirent une importance plus grande par la suite. Le Rosh Hashanah se distingue surtout par l'usage de la corne du bélier dans les synagogues. On marque ainsi le début de l'année, tout en commémorant la création du monde.

student who was working on a thesis dealing with the failure of industry in the United States. We talked to a philosophy student whose conceptions and horizons end somewhere in the middle of the 19th century. Humanities without sociology, without philosophy, without literature.

It is not reassuring to hear that the technological departments are among the most advanced and developed in the world. They bring up a generation of technicians but not of men of science capable of questioning, or criticizing, of rejecting false notions or admitting unpleasant truths.

I asked myself: Are these people reconciled to all that? Is it only a visitor like myself who can be sensitive to the abyss he sees between the façade and the interior? Instead of the "I wish" there is the "you must go"; ergo, say "I wish."

Slogans, slogans, slogans everywhere — on every corner, on every street, in every plant, every office. Everywhere there is "educational guidance" and propaganda. The word "Peace" shouts forth on every street. I think the Peace Congress in Moscow was intended more for internal propaganda than for influencing the outside world.

The Soviet Union is trying to explain to its people which still remembers the horrors of the last war that an even more horrible war is threatened by all the countries of the world, led by America, and that only in the Soviet Union lies the hope of peace. That is why every Soviet citizen must do anything that the State demands of him without complaining, since peace depends on his readiness to exert himself.

As far as I could ascertain from casual conversations with people on the streets, propaganda has not succeeded in replacing common sense. One evening, my friend and I were taking a stroll on the boardwalk in Odessa at the seashore. We found, among the thousands of people who came to breathe the evening air, a couple of Jews about fifty years of age, who tried to engage us in a conversation in Yiddish.

Said the first Jew: "Do they build synagogues in Israel?" Said the other Jew: "It is not synagogues they need, but factory plants." The first one continued: "Are they studying the Torah in your country?" Answered the second one: "What they need is not Torah but a strong army." Said the first one: "Are you coming from the Peace Congress?" Said the other: "Don't believe in all those peace congresses. What you ought to do is to prepare a good atomic bomb in Israel." And he went on: "You are only two million — that's not enough. But we here are three million; that makes five million Jews; and together we can beat that Fascist Nasser."

This short powerful drama was interrupted by the approach of our interpreter. The Jew still managed to whisper to us: "But quick, quick, quick!"

Now let me tell you about our two visits to the synagogues of Odessa and Moscow.

Odessa is an attractive enough city of 750,000 people. It is brighter, more open and more colorful than Moscow. The synagogue is situated in one of the small streets near the port. We had to work hard on our guide to let us visit the synagogue and to be allowed to forego the trip on the water which was offered us instead. The sexton's wife unlocked the doors for us and we waited for some time until the first Jew came to recite the afternoon prayer in the cold, drab hall.

There are some 120,000 Jews in Odessa. Some place the number as high as 200,000. Out of all that number finally another three old Jews came for the afternoon service on a Monday. One of the four was a visitor from the Caucasus who told us that in his town there is a Jewish community of some 6,000 who are observant and bear their Jewishness with dignity.

In Moscow, the congregation was much larger, though no less melancholy. About five hundred Jews came on that Saturday morning — the week of the reading of the portion of Balak — to fill the house of worship which resembles a shelter for the unfortunate. The average age is sixty. They are stooped, poorly dressed and have a pitiable look.

It rained that morning. The worshippers were praying silently as they listened to the chanting of the hazzan (cantor). When the members of the Israeli embassy walked in, a spark was lit in the worshippers' eyes. They rose to their feet to honor them.

There was a dramatic contrast between the festive garb of the embassy people and their solemn party on the one hand and the drab, beggarly appearance of the synagogue. The guests and the members of the embassy sit on a special dais removed from the congregation. The bond between the guests and the congregants is the bond of the eyes and of glances.

This goes on all the time as a silent, shattering experience, which envelops you and does not leave you throughout the whole service. The eyes of the congregants are directed at the diplomats and derive inspiration from their presence. There were among the guests also members of other missions.

When the prayers ended, the congregation rose and formed two rows between which the guests passed, shaking hands and bidding them a good Sabbath. Words are inadequate to depict this sight of the aged worshippers whose frail hands shake yours seeking to draw out of it some long-sought-for life-giving force.

Let me now report on our visit to the editorial offices of the new magazine Sovietish Heimland. The editors who received us formed two groups: the smaller one which talked and the larger one which kept silent all the time. We were asked questions and were given answers to our own questions. Let me point out three main aspects of the conversation.

They asked us to see them in a positive light in view of the special situation in which they are placed. When we asked how they thought Yiddish could survive if the younger generation is not taught the language, their replies were stammering and evasive, as if they wished to convey that they had some vague hopes of a miracle.

They told us they received 800 manuscripts for publication and that among the contributors there were also some young writers. They asked us to see to it that some of the poems and stories appearing in their magazine should be translated into Hebrew in Israel. When one of our members told them about the Yiddish Department at the Hebrew University, about the Yiddish press and literature and the Yiddish theater in Israel, you could see their eyes light up.

The "speaking" group, especially the editor, Sophie Frei, wished to know more about life in Israel, about the unfavorable reports they received on the maltreatment of new immigrants, and about the Arabs and of the imperialist bases and the hostility towards Soviet Jewry. They boasted of the item on Bialik which appeared in the new Russian encyclopedia.

When the group broke up, the editor accompanied us to the street. As she closed the door behind her, she said: "Now that the official conversation is over, I'd like to tell you something which it is well that you should know." We expected a declaration of Jewish solidarity, but were treated instead to something else.

She told us firmly that we must not believe all the distortions about Soviet anti-Semitism. There was no anti-Semitism in the economic trials and death sentences, she said. It was the ordinary process of law against criminals such as one would expect in any civilized society. And she closed the door. (Earlier, when we had asked why the magazine did not publish anything about Jewish life in general and Israel in particular, the answer was that it was a literary magazine.)

What you'll love about Surprising Amsterdam

Suddenly, Amsterdam is one of the four most popular cities in Europe, along with London, Paris and Rome. Why is Amsterdam suddenly being "discovered"? Read on:

Friendly people. They smile at you, treat you like a guest, not a tourist. And they speak your language. Amsterdam is the gentle, friendly way to ease yourself into Europe.

A city with character. Amsterdam is a beautiful, picturesque city. It has all the sophistication of London, the gaiety of Paris, the grandeur of Rome—yet it has special flavour all its own.

It's a swinging town. No city in Europe has so high a per-person ratio of cafes featuring variety acts, exotic dancers, jazz and other after-dark divertissements.

A city for food lovers. Amsterdam abounds with good restaurants. You can eat in 12 different languages—from Spanish to Indonesian.

Amsterdam is a city of music. You'll be serenaded by gaily-painted barrel organs, hear more carillons than in any other city. It has one of the world's six best symphony orchestras—the famous Concertgebouw Orchestra.

Amsterdam for sightseeing. It has more canals than Venice, crossed by 636 bridges. Within an hour's drive there are 12 medieval castles. You can see the Anne Frank house. Visit the building once considered the "eighth wonder of the world"—the Royal Palace.

Amsterdam is a city of art. You can see the world's greatest collection of Rembrandts, no less than 170 priceless van Goghs, and steed yourself in the Golden Age of Dutch painting.

Amsterdam airport for tax-free shopping. Shop for such things as Swiss watches, German cameras, French perfumes—the range of goods will amaze you, and so will the prices.

Amsterdam is the hub of Europe. It's the best place to start a European tour. It's smack in the middle of Europe's capitals. Distances are short. And KLM's connections are superb.

City-hop at no extra air fare. KLM lets you visit extra cities for the price of the fare to just one. Example: Plan your final destination to be Rome, and get up to 15 extra cities free.

KLM lets you Pay-Later. No need to put a dent in your savings, fly now with KLM for just 10% down, the rest over 24 months.

See your travel agent—that's a must!

The first and most important step in planning any trip is to see your travel agent. He can save you money, save you time, spare you headaches. He is a professional who's "been there". His services won't cost you a cent, so see him soon.

By Yizhar Smilansky, of Israel, in the Jewish Frontier. He is a "Sabra" or native

Upon returning from a two-weeks' visit in 1963 to the Soviet Union I have been made an expert, which, to be sure, I am not.

I do not know the Russian language. Two weeks are not enough to make one familiar with such a vast country. All I can offer are my impressions, which I hope throw some light on a segment of the truth about Russia. I am not sure I have entirely succeeded in ridding myself of all the preconceived notions about Russia, which all of us have — more perhaps than about any other country — but I did make a very serious effort to be objective.

I had known, of course, that the founding fathers of Israel derived much of their character from their Russian background, but it was not until I came to Russia that I was struck by the extent and the intensity of those influences.

In Moscow I recognized corners of the Tel-Aviv I recall from the past. In Odessa I stumbled upon whole chunks of present-day Tel-Aviv-Jaffa. The way people behave, their mannerisms, their social conventions, their practices are so patently the same as I have known them to be among the old-timers who shaped Israeli society.

Not only in the way they act at the table or on the street, or the way they dress, but also, in an amazingly large measure, in the speeches delivered by the leaders of the USSR and especially so in Khrushchev's great oration at the Peace Congress.

As Khrushchev held forth for three solid hours, I could, without understanding the language, hear in his address the voices of many of our most admirable leaders in Israel; in the way the address was constructed, in its diction, in that pattern in which the main theses are first stated, later to be reiterated with ellipses, in that total lack of humor and that abundance of sarcasm, in those merciless attacks on the adversary, in the pathos of appealing to the public and to its eagerness for a message of great vision, and even in the very gesticulation.

Without being dogmatic about matters of esthetics, I can also honestly say that I saw in Russia many of the things I deplore in my own country: that drab slovenliness, that facile enthusiasm which claims that all that really matters is "the heart" and not the form of expression.

There is Moscow: two and three-story buildings painted in yellowish ochre, few stores and even fewer vehicles — a sort of an endlessly vast backwater-town extending in every direction. One or two wide streets with presumptuously tall edifices, topped by the Red Star, hardly affect the general picture of a cheerless, colorless, lazily sprawling overgrown village. After nightfall the city becomes a wasteland, void of traffic.

Even on Gorky Avenue, where my hotel was situated, with the exception of the morning and the early afternoon, when there is a fair amount of movement, once men and vehicles have disappeared from it, the emptiness virtually howls on the wide thoroughfare. The clean and beautiful Moscow subway, of which the Russians are so proud, without ever mentioning that it was built during the years of famine, is not crowded and seems to roll along in an air of vacant apathy.

The ten-storey houses on Gorky Avenue look like a row of soldiers standing at attention. Each house is flanked by a giant gate, about four stories high, surmounted by huge pillars and by bell-towers without bells.

All of this seems to be made for men and women of titanic dimensions. Yet behind these gates, towers and pillars are old courtyards filled with ramshackle huts in which humanity swarms like ants. The incredible fact that both the meticulously kept imposing façade and the miserable interior are part and parcel of the same building complex can only be realized — with a shock — when one sees them both together, as I did, from the top-floor window of a hotel.

Such are the pitiable homes of most Muscovites who live there, a family per room, five or six families sharing the same kitchen and toilet facilities. However, new housing projects are now in the process of construction on the city's outskirts and in its suburbs, which are clean, airy and generally make a good impression.

Early in the morning a gang of old grandmothers begins to clean the pavement on Gorky Avenue. They drag along thick rubber hoses with which to sprinkle the pavement. They look so pitiful that one feels like helping them. A downpour did not serve as a signal to interrupt the work of cleaning.

Cleanliness comes before the vagaries of the weather. The clothes are generally drab and slovenly. Open collars, discolored raincoats on men, unattractive attire on women, flat heels, a tired gait, a gloomy grey procession of men on sidewalks.

Both men and women work. They work till the age of 65 for a salary as low as 35 rubles per month, which is the pay of the street-cleaners and the elevator-operators (in my hotel there were no elevator-boys but elevator nannies). I saw women driving large buses, working at construction jobs, carrying large pails of gravel; I saw women in overalls in industrial plants. I was told there is no type of work in which women are not represented.

On returning from work everybody has to queue up for food. There is a line for bread, a line for potatoes (which, incidentally, were in short supply when I was there), a line for mineral water, a line for Pravda in the morning, and lines of a special kind in front of the barber-shops, especially beauty parlors.

I was told that army officers in the higher echelons earn from 900 to 1,000 rubles a month; that many writers, actors and artists ride in a chauffeur-driven car and own private villas on the city's outskirts. When I tried to meet some of the leading authors (including Yevtushenko) I was told that at this time of the year they were on vacation.

When I asked a young artist how he made a living, he explained to me that artists admitted to the Academy are assured of an affluent life, but a man like himself lives on the income he derives from selling paintings to the well-to-do. When he saw the expression of amazement on my face at such a statement in the land of socialism, he explained immediately that he meant the leaders of the party and others who were lucky enough to be able to afford a highly-priced portrait or other paintings.

Since money in Russia cannot buy property, it finds its main outlet in ostentatious waste. That I could see for myself at a dinner given in our honor by the Authors' Association, where I saw on heavily-laden tables the most expensive foods and drinks that Russia produces. It was a sharp contrast to the food served in the popular restaurant in the same street.

Just as the façade on Gorky Avenue, the widest in Europe, differs from the interior of its courtyards, even so the privileged classes in Soviet society have nothing in common with the living standard and the way of life of the ordinary people.

On visiting some of the most promising new housing projects, I realized that there too the neatness of the façade stands in contrast to the neglected shabby-looking interior. A similar contrast between the façade and the interior could be found in comparing the excellently constructed and perfected airplane in which we flew from Moscow to Odessa and the workers' housing projects, and in the difference between the overt theory and covert practice in the collective farms.

I visited a kolhoz in the neighborhood of Odessa. (Incidentally, they boast of a milk production of 3,000 liters per cow, which is half of our average in Israel.) We wanted to see the inside of a farmer's house, but did not succeed.

What we did manage to see was that every peasant's house is surrounded by a yard about half an acre in size which is superbly cultivated: potatoes, cabbages and other vegetables, fruit trees, including cherry and pear, with ripe fruit; pigs and chickens foraging for food on the side.

We had been told that these private "farms" constitute one and a half per cent of the total of the kolhoz lands, but that fraction produces 60% of the vegetables, fruit, and meat for the market. There is enough in this fact forty-five years after the revolution, if it is true, to upset our notions about the success of the Soviet experiment, even if we are inclined to view it favorably.

What we see here is the façade of communism totally at variance with the inner content.

This passionate manifestation of man's private initiative is not merely an economic phenomenon, but, it seems to me, it is a case of an expression of the long-suppressed urge for greater freedom within the narrow limitations set by the regime. Or even beyond the limits permitted by law.

That is why today in Soviet Russia economic misdemeanors are punished by death and the widest possible publicity. The regime would not be doing it if such transgressions were, as they are in most countries, confined to isolated law-breakers.

It seems that parallel to the social pyramid on Russia's surface, there is an inner pyramid of deceit and theft necessary to carry on one's life. It is also a way of protesting against being built into a hermetically constructed set-up from which there is no way out.

Consider the position of a great nation of 200 million people, all literate, in the present-day world of easy communication, which is practically denied the use of the press and the radio and is ignorant not only about what takes place in distant lands but in its own country.

It is a nation that is constantly and endlessly being guided. There is someone who knows what is good for it to know and what is not good. Someone who decides what is the truth and what is not. And, of course, it is the duty of every citizen to accept the truth as it is presented to him or her by the authorities, for his or her own good.

We experienced a shocking example of this.

It was in Odessa, where we had been sent from Moscow after the close of the Peace Congress, to bring the message of peace. The other delegations were the Rumanian, the Mexican, and the American. All four delegations were given the red carpet welcome in the Soviet headquarters in Odessa in an impressive ceremony which included a band and children with flowers.

There was a large crowd and each delegation delivered an address bearing a message of world peace which was acclaimed by the audience. When the turn came for the Israeli delegation, our member, Fritz Halevi, spoke in Russian.

He reminded the listeners that we came from a small peace-loving, labor-loving country, ruled by a socialist party and concluded with the Hebrew words: Hevenu shalom aleichem ("We bring you peace"). The applause which followed his words was the loudest and most prolonged.

No wonder the speaker tried to find in the next edition of the Odessa Pravda the report of his speech. But, when after considerable trouble, he succeeded in getting hold of a copy, he was disappointed. His picture was in the paper, his name was in the paper, but his address had been treated to addition and subtraction. Everything he said about Israel was deleted. Everything he failed to say was printed.

What appeared in the Odessa Pravda added up to something like the following: "As I heard Khrushchev's words at the Congress, my heart overflowed. . . ."

This forgery was shocking not only because it was perpetrated on us, not only because it left out all the fine things said about Israel, and not only because the crowd received them so affectionately, but, mainly, because hundreds of schoolchildren of the upper grades had been present. They had heard the words spoken in Russian and had later read the quotations in Pravda. How can children reconcile what they hear with what they read?

Everywhere you go, in the park or in the bus, you see people reading books, not a few of them scientific books or text-books. Partly this may be explained by lack of room in the house to read or study, partly perhaps by the disdain for the press to which the people are treated. The literature of the West that I saw in the bookstores was mainly of the 19th century, such as Dickens, Victor Hugo, Balzac, and of the present century only those such as Hemingway, whose works depict in black color life in the West.

When Jean Paul Sartre inquired of the Authors' Association in the Soviet Union why Kafka was not being translated into Russian, the answer was that there was plenty of time for that. The writers themselves read Kafka just as they read other proscribed authors, but presumably they know best when the Russian public will be mature enough to read their books. Perhaps it is better not to read at all than to read a newspaper without knowing what goes on in the world, what any reader anywhere else knows from glancing at the headlines.

There is a stifled air about the magnificent university buildings, with all its marble and 25-storey towers and luxurious lawns and parks. Perhaps because the humanities there are in a state I might call deteriorated or infantile. We talked to an economics

Rabbis Recall "Crystal Night", Omen Of Camps, Hate, Death

Many New York rabbis soberly reminded their congregations of an event that occurred 27 years ago, and they all voiced the hope that the world would never witness its repetition.

On November 10, 1938, shouting mobs of Nazis roamed through German cities smashing synagogue windows until the shattered glass in the streets shone like crystal, says the New York Times. Ever since, that evening has been remembered as Crystal Night, or Kristalnacht, the ominous harbinger of concentration camps, hate, and death.

Preaching at the Hillcrest Jewish Center in Flushing, N. Y., Rabbi Israel Mowshowitz, a past president of the New York Board of Rabbis, told worshipers that November 10, 1938, "must forever remain a day of infamy in the history of mankind."

At that time, he said, the world was "indifferent and unsympathetic" to the destruction of synagogues in Germany.

"Had people been aware of the aftermath of this act of barbarism," the rabbi said, "millions of lives might have been spared in the holocaust which followed."

Most of the rabbis preached on Kristalnacht at the joint request of the New York board, the Rabbinical Council of America and the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America.

In issuing the Rabbinical Council's request, its president, Rabbi Israel Miller, said that "this is hardly an anniversary that one wants to commemorate."

"But," he went on, "the German people, seeking to restore their position in the human family, dare not forget, and Jews everywhere and humanity at large owe to the memory of Nazi victims a pledge not to forget."
